

Dictation

Though admission cost as much as two US dollars per person, yet there was a large attendance of several thousand.

At each critical moment, the stadium would be echoing with the spectators' chorus of wild yells for their own athletic heroes.

Among the yelling crowds were not only young boys and girls, but also many hoary-headed old professors.

Can I have been assimilated into the barbarous modern version of the ancient Roman practice?